Guide For Consumers

Indoor Air Pollution is ranked as one of the top five environmental threats to public health by the US Environmental Protection Agency.

Is the air in your home making you sick?

We spend over 90% of our time indoors. The air in our homes can be up to 100 times more polluted than outdoor air. Indoor air pollution and environmental triggers can have serious health effects, in particular for at-risk populations, including those with asthma, allergies, COPD, Alpha-1 or other upper respiratory ailments.

The incidence of upper respiratory illness is increasing at a rapid rate. Almost 18 million people have asthma and it is now the most chronic illness among children.

If you have asthma, allergies or upper respiratory illness or know someone who does, let us help. We provide in-home air quality evaluations designed to identify indoor environmental issues that may be affecting your family's health. The evaluations are fast, easy and inexpensive.

The Indoor Air Alliance is a non-profit community organization dedicated to improving the air we breathe - at home, at school and at work.

What's In Your Air?

The Healthy Home Survey produces a complete report and a set of recommendations based on the conditions found in your home. An Annual Healthy Home program is also available to monitor your indoor air quality each year.

The Indoor Air Alliance partners with health care providers to develop customized programs that work in conjunction with a patient's treatment program. We also work with community organizations to provide subsidized Healthy Home Surveys to those who need financial assistance. Please ask your community organization to contact us directly if you need financial assistance.

Membership in the Indoor Air Alliance is available to health care providers, corporations and companies, community organizations and individuals.
